Asian Journal of Peacebuilding (AJP) is a semiannual peer-reviewed journal that publishes original research on the topics of violence, conflict, and peacebuilding around the world. The aim of AJP is twofold: First, it intends to promote innovative research on issues related to peacebuilding in Asia, a region where national divisions, transitions, and developments are intertwined with new forms of threat, violence, and destruction. Second, it aims at disseminating peace studies conducted both in traditional disciplines of social sciences and the humanities and in interdisciplinary fields at the interface of religion, culture, ecology, and gender studies. AJP welcomes papers written by scholars around the world, both within and outside the Asian region.

Exemplary topics on which AJP focuses include, but are not limited to: reconciliation in divided societies (or nations); migrants and refugees; WMD developments; development and ecological destruction; historical and territorial disputes; peacemaking or mediation in intrastate conflicts; violence and transitional justice; anti-nuclear weapons (or anti-nuclear power) movements; women affected by war; democratic transition and human rights; post-conflict institutionalization; humanitarian assistance and protection.
